Canadian Railway Troops

Introduction

Canadian railway units played a major role in the construction and maintenance of railways of all gauges, including light railways, for the five British Army areas in France and Belgium. Some were formed as Royal Engineer units but, after the formation of the Corps of Canadian Railway troops in April 1918, they became the responsibility of the Office Administering the Royal Canadian Engineers. They were not, however, a part of the Canadian Engineers.

Corps of Canadian Railway Troops

Background Information

Canadian Railway Troops battalions, on arrival in France, came under the command of Brigadier-General J. W. Stewart, a Canadian who was Deputy Director General Transportation (Construction) at British General Headquarters.

In March 1917, Stewart established the administrative headquarters of the Canadian Railway Troops at General Headquarters. It was not connected with the Canadian Corps.

Reorganized effective 23 April 1918, and redesignated as the Corps of Canadian Railway troops. Composed of Headquarters Canadian Railway Troops Services in England, Canadian Railway Troops Depot (organized at Purfleet, Essex late in 1916), 1 - 13 battalions Canadian Railway Troops, No. 13 Operating Company Light Railway, No. 58 Operating company Broad Gauge Railway, No. 69 Wagon Erecting Company, No. 85 Engine Crew Company and the Canadian Overseas Railway Construction Corps.

Disbanded by General Order 196 of 1 November 1920.

14th Battalion, Canadian Railway Troops

Background Information

There was a suggestion in the summer of 1918 that the Canadian Overseas Railway Construction Corps be reorganized as the 14th Battalion, Canadian Railway Troops. This, apparently, was not acted upon but General Order 196 of 1 November 1920 authorized the disbandment of the 14th Battalion, Canadian Railway Troops. Further, file HQ 683-897-1 (RG24, vol. 1809) indicates that the 14th Battalion, Canadian Railway Troops was to demobilize at Montreal in 1919.
